> What's RIGHT With ALABAMA A LAND OF

PERPETUAL PROMISE

P ECENTLY the author of an article, critical of an Alabama city, paid it an unwitting compliment by calling it a "city of perpetual promise." Perhaps he should have been more liberal with his complimentand included all of Alabama.

From Biblical days, a land of promise has always been one looked toward with longing and hope. What joy would there be in living in a land without promise -without hope? What thrill of achievement could you expect to find in a section where all possibilities of development and progress had been exhausted-where the only end to look forward to would be stagnation? What pleasure might there be in the knowledge that there was no opportunity-no promise in Alabama, because she had reached the state of perfection?

If Alabama were not a land of promise, farmers from other sections would not come to settle in her rich agricultural territory to coax abundant crops from her soil; if she were a land barren of opportunity industrialists would not bring their millions into the state to establish offices, plants and warehouses (thus meeting one of her greatest present needs); if there were no promise of the future, then there would indeed be little need or reason for efforts toward self-improvement. Let us rejoice that Alabama is a land of perpetual promise—let us hope that she will ever be!
